Last Semester

Everything that stops being possible in May. Not what would be nice — what expires.

TODAY	GRADUATION DAY	WEEKS LEFT — COUNT THEM	WEEKS I'LL BE ON A SHOW

1 THE EXPIRY TEST

The only entry rule: it gets harder, costlier, or impossible once the ID stops working

Studio and shop access · equipment checkout · the library · free and student-priced tickets · professors' office hours · being cheap to say yes to · the people who are only here until May. If it will be exactly as available in 2028, it does not belong on this page — put it on a different list.

2 THE CITY, WHILE IT IS THE ONE I LIVE IN

Bias toward what New York does that nowhere else does, and toward things that need a particular season or a particular person. Write the borough — it is how you will actually plan the day.

WHAT / WHERE	BOROUGH	WHO WITH	SEASON IT NEEDS	COST	✓

3 PEOPLE WHO SCATTER

The ones you assume you will keep seeing

After May, everyone becomes a plane ticket. Write the thing you always said you would do together, and put a real date on it — the vague version does not survive graduation.

WHO	WHERE THEY GO AFTER MAY	THE THING WE ALWAYS SAID WE'D DO	BY WHEN	✓

4 ROOMS I CAN STILL GET INTO

Being a student is a door that closes quietly

Sets, shops, crews, classes you are not enrolled in, someone's thesis, a designer who will let a student shadow. You are cheap to say yes to right now, and that is leverage. Spend it.

6 SMALL, FREE, AND NEAR

So the sheet is not only made of ambitious days

Costs nothing	Alone, on purpose	An hour or less

7 LAST TIMES WORTH NOTICING

Most last times happen without anyone announcing them — the last time you walk out of that building, the last fitting in that shop, the last late train home with those people. Name the ones you want to be awake for.

8 WHAT I WILL NOT GET TO — AND I AM AT PEACE WITH IT

Write this one honestly. A list this size is only usable if something is allowed to be cut.
